Essay Structure

Introduction
(see CLAS introductions handout)

1. Opening Sentence/Hook
   a. At a glance, the opening sentence should give the reader an idea of what your paper will be about.
   b. You can use an appropriate hook to grab your reader’s attention and make them want to read more.

2. Background
   a. Give any information your reader may need leading up to your thesis. For example, texts, events, and/or people you’ll be discussing or the different sides of the argument.
   b. You don’t have to give too much detail; leave the juicy bits of evidence and analysis for your body paragraphs.

3. Thesis
   a. The last sentence of your introduction should be a specific thesis statement outlining your argument and how you will argue it through the rest of the paper.

Body Paragraphs
(as many as is appropriate to prove your point)

1. Topic Sentence
   a. Your topic sentence relates back to your thesis and identifies which particular point of your argument the paragraph will discuss. They should be organized in a logical order.

2. Evidence
   a. Provide ample and varying types of evidence, including primary and secondary sources.
   b. Be sure to introduce, integrate, and cite all sources.
   c. Organize evidence so that each piece builds off the one before.

3. Analysis
   a. Provide analysis for each piece of evidence, showing how it supports your argument/thesis.

4. Transition
   a. Summarize the main point and transition to the next paragraph.

Conclusion
(see CLAS conclusions handout)

1. Restate Thesis
   a. Summarize the argument of your paper and check to make sure it matches your thesis.
   b. Don’t rewrite your thesis word for word. Rephrase it.

2. Significance/"Big Picture"
   a. Take your paper a step further by showing how it ties into the bigger picture or is relevant to our daily life.
